Vajra Plane (Thunderbolt Vehicle)

The Vajra Plane, also called the Thunderbolt Vehicle, is a mobile and flying craft capable of harnessing the energy of the universe. It is powered by two “thunder wedges” integrated into the supporting chassis. The vehicle has the potential to utilize energy that is, on the one hand, virtually inexhaustible, and on the other, possesses sufficient force to propel it at speeds approaching that of light.

The term Vajra (Dordže) originates from Sanskrit and is often translated as “diamond” or “thunderbolt,” meaning indestructible. In Buddhism, the word vajra also refers to a ritual object used in tantric ceremonies. In Hindu mythology, the vajra is the weapon of Indra, the Vedic god of rain and ruler of the devas. It is an extraordinarily powerful weapon, combining the qualities of a sword, club, and spear.
